UK Health Service Needs More Staff and Money

Healthcare in Britain is facing big challenges. The National Health Service (NHS) is very famous because it is free for everyone, but now the system is under pressure.

Many patients complain about long waiting lists to see a doctor or to have an operation. According to experts, people often wait months or even years for help. The main reasons for this situation are not enough money and too few workers.

Doctors and nurses are very tired. They work long hours and many of them are leaving their jobs because of bad working conditions.

The government promises to spend more money and create a better system. They want to hire more professionals and reduce waiting times. People hope that the situation will get better soon.

NHS Promotes New "Talking Therapies"

The National Health Service (NHS) in England is launching a new campaign to support mental health. Millions of adults feel worried or anxious, especially after the pandemic.

The new campaign explains that "talking therapies" can help people feel better. A talking therapy is when you talk to a trained professional about your feelings.

"NHS talking therapies completely changed my life," says Mark, a 35-year-old patient. "I was very anxious, but now I feel much better and I can work again." The NHS wants to help people get back to their lives.
